1837> the termination of the lease. Smith's statements were merely a reiteration of an offer that was contingent on the lease agreement having been approved by the arbitrator and the parties. Any statements Smith may have made in the presence of Mr. Danner and Mr. Johnson were not made for the purpose of terminating the lease agreement. In addition to the statements Smith made outside of the presence of the Johnsons' Real Estate agent, Mr. Ford, the Johnsons also claim Smith made numerous statements in the presence of Mr. Ford. The testimony regarding these statements was contradictory. Mr. Ford testified that Smith said that if the contract was not signed in one hour he would not enter the property. Mr. Johnson's testimony contradicted Mr. Ford's testimony. When a statement is of an ambiguous nature and is susceptible to more than one interpretation, the jury is free to decide which party's version is true. Kleinschmidt v. Clark, 67 Ind.App. 163, 118 N.E. 327, 330 (1918). The jury in this matter was not faced with an obligation to choose between contradictory statements. The jury was faced only with deciding whether Smith's statements were made with the intent to injure the Johnsons' real estate business or were merely an idle threat. Smith's statements were made on the day the parties agreed to a lease and Smith sent the contract to the Johnsons' attorney. Thus, the Johnsons could have rejected the contract on the day Smith made the statements if they had agreed that they could not come to an agreement with the real estate agent. The first issue is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the jury's finding that Smith's statements were not made for the purpose of injuring the Johnsons' real estate business. The sole issue of this case is whether the Johnsons are entitled to rescind the contract based on the fraud and misrepresentations of Smith. The evidence reveals that Smith's statements were ambiguous. The
