You will see that all links in Google are pointing to different sites from where you are trying to download the file. For example on the first site, the links are: www.blogspot.com/ [site URL] www.nocolona.com/ [site URL] The URL for that site is obviously valid and works, but the site itself is not linked to from anywhere. The second site, however, is linked from these addresses: www.fck-captcha.com/blackhole/captcha.dll.php?write=captcha The URL for that site is: www.fck-captcha.com/blackhole/captcha.dll.php?write=captcha [site URL] The result is your download gets stuck at a certain point where it does not download at all and takes out the file from Google's cache. Now, when I checked the page's source code, I found that the site is downloading the URL you provided. In other words, the URL with your captcha number is being passed, but the file downloads completely from the site's server. Below is the excerpt from the source code of that page with the code you provided. In this excerpt, it's passing the captcha number from the URL by passing the data through GET and then send it to the server to download the file for us. If I try to manually create the same link with the GET function, it works perfectly fine.

www.fck-captcha.com/blackhole/captcha.dll.php?write=captcha&v=C79BFF00C007B This makes me think that it is something to do with the way Google is indexing the site. Now, I did everything I could to check my server and network thoroughly, but to no avail. Please help me with what is going on. I am not sure if this has something to do with Google's cache or what. I can live with that, but I am not sure where to go from here. A: I am not sure
