Choose your language : elvi.vex.com.Q: Proper casting of a value I have the following piece of code and need to know if this is the proper way to do this: public class B { public int x; public void Set(int i) { x = i; } } public class C { public int x; public void Set(int i) { if (x == null) x = (B)i; else x = i; } }

The first bit of code checks if x is null, if it is, it will call Set on x and set it using the second piece of code. I don't know if this is correct, first off, I know I can just put x = i in the second piece of code and it would work fine, but in this case, where a value is being assigned to x, wouldn't that cause a problem? I'm obviously talking about the line x = (B)i; A: It is not safe to cast from type A to a subtype B, if the runtime type of i is something else than A. For instance, if you have this code: public class A { } public class B : A { } you can only cast a B to an A, but not from an A to a B. As for the null check, you can do that safely with instanceof, but this way is easier to read. The Tocantins river turtles face a harsh climate that makes their environment nearly unsuitable for them and their survival, but the Brazilian Institute of Environment and Renewable Natural Resources (IBAMA), and the Brazilian Army decided it was time to make their home more suited for them and their ecosystems. The 'ecotour' is a new reserve that will protect the region from increased mining and deforestation in the area. This ecotour was created by the use of military helicopters and boats in order to take the turtles into the forest, c6a93da74d
