The automatic stay is not intended to give the debtor a commercial advantage over his creditors. Some of the automatic stay's most important functions are to shield the debtor and his assets from actions outside the bankruptcy proceeding and to assure equality of distribution among creditors. To interfere with the debtor's possession or use of property, or with the enforcement of a judgment against the debtor, is to interfere with the debtor's fundamental rights as a debtor and is subject to sanction. Creditors bargained for beneficial treatment in return for the repayment of their claims, but Congress has determined that the interest of the creditor should be subordinated to the interests of all creditors in the bankruptcy case. For this reason, despite the provisions of sections 362(a)(3) and (4), a creditor holding a lien on property of the bankruptcy estate may not take any action to collect a pre-petition debt from the debtor out of that property until the property leaves the bankruptcy estate. One could argue that a trustee should not be barred from enforcing statutory rights of a debtor in possession, but the prohibition against third party actions, enforced by the automatic stay, is the central feature of the protection given to the debtor by bankruptcy law.
