Adding a canvas in PS used to be a tedious and needlessly time consuming affair. With the latest version I find myself doing it with relative ease. My original experience with an iPad native app was a grand total of about 5 minutes. With a browse button I discover a folder or folder of images that I want to work on. I either swipe them over to the main panel and begin editing the first or I browse through each in turn. Either way I'm enjoying the increased convenience. I am using a tablet for my Lightroom CC workflow and I have to say that I haven't felt any pain or anxiety due to the etherial post processing workflow. Even the iOS updates haven't changed that. However, the new Creative Cloud process, especially around file management isn't here yet and I really wish it were. At the same time I am happy that the iPad Pro and Creative Cloud do so much that when it does get there it'll be easier than ever to manage as I've been doing over the years. As I've worked across multiple monitors on my desk I know what having these tools on the iPad Pro as an anytime, anywhere tool is really going to do and the ease of use of having the lightroom cc app is very apparent. It's the future of doing work and I am excited to see what Adobe does with this. The new Find in List modes makes it quick and simple to locate files later, with one-click cuts, inserts and selections. The Feature Details panel updates the 1:1 aspect ratio of your image without changing the dimensions, rotation or scale. And, the new frame capture tool lets you step through the cropping process, and gives you the option to use a stacking, panoramic or square crop.
